Corporate Tools Hiring Team,

My introduction to Corporate Tools didn't begin with a job posting—it began in a classroom.

One of my Nucamp instructors worked at Corporate Tools while he was teaching my cohort. Watching him teach gave me an appreciation for the curiosity, collaboration, and high standards I associate with Corporate Tools.

During class, he saw me ask questions, volunteer to take on challenges, and admit when I didn't know something yet. That experience confirmed that I thrive in environments where curiosity, collaboration, and continuous learning are encouraged.

Software development gives me something I have always wanted in a career: the chance to be creative, solve problems, and never stop learning. Technology is constantly evolving, which means there is always something new to explore, build, improve, or figure out.

My projects reflect that mindset. Anime Art Archive is an ongoing Vue.js application that has become my primary project for learning Vue, building reusable components, designing responsive interfaces, and planning a scalable application. With Press Start Café, one of my biggest challenges was the navigation. I worked through responsive layout and mobile menu behavior to create a smoother experience across screen sizes. The process taught me to look beyond whether something works technically and pay attention to how it actually feels for the person using it.

These projects represent more than finished code—they represent problems I had to solve, lessons I learned, and the progress I've made as a developer.

That's why Corporate Tools stands out to me. I'm not just looking for my first front-end developer role—I'm looking for a team where I can keep learning, take ownership of my work, contribute meaningful work, and grow alongside the people around me.

Thank you for taking the time to consider my application. I'd appreciate the opportunity to continue the conversation and bring that same curiosity, enthusiasm, and willingness to learn to the Corporate Tools team.

Sincerely,

Amber Trottier
